COOKING ON YOUR BOAT : SAFETY TIPS

No boat adventure is complete without food and ice-cold refreshments. If you'll be cooking on your boat—whether on a marine grill or in a galley—the process is quite different than using your home's kitchen. Because of the size constraints of most galleys and the unstable conditions that come with floating in the water, it's crucial that you pay attention to safety while cooking on a boat.

- Never cook unless your boat is anchored or docked.
- Knife safety is extremely important. A magnetic knife rack can be a good way to make sure your knives stay safely in place and don't slide off the counter.
- Some cooking methods should be saved for life on the shore, specifically deep fat frying. Frying is always a hazard on a gas stove, but it's even moreso when you're not on flat ground.
- Many people find it easier to prep meals at home where there's more space. Everything can be carried onto your boat in gallon bags or reusable containers via a cooler.
- Grills should be specifically designed for use on a boat. Desirable features include a latching lid, corrosion-resistance hardware, and the ability to pivot and lock into place.

OPEN FLAMES ON THE DOCKS ARE STRICTLY PROHIBITED. NO CHARCOAL OR GAS FIRES OF ANY KIND WILL BE ALLOWED WITHIN THE CONFINES OF THE MARINA

- Experienced boaters understand the severity of an onboard fire. Keep a fire extinguisher nearby while cooking to avert potential disasters.
- Remember to dispose of your trash responsibly.

FOUR LEGGED CREW MEMBERS

Just a friendly reminder that dogs must be kept on leashes at all times, whether you are on the docks or walking around the property. Cats are not allowed to roam on docks or vessels at any time. Waste must also be picked up immediately, and if you are on the dock and an accident occurs, a quick hose down is a good idea, too...
